

Questions and Answers Related to this Outbreak:

I have a jar of Peter Pan/Great Value peanut butter with the product code beginning with “2111” stamped on the lid, and I/my children ate some of it, but no one is sick. What should I do?

Do not eat any more of the peanut butter. Throw away the jar. If anyone in your family develops severe diarrheal illness with bloody diarrhea, fever, or symptoms lasting more than three days, they should consult a healthcare provider.

I/my household member ate Peter Pan/Great Value peanut butter Peter Pan/Great Value peanut butter with the product code beginning with “2111” stamped on the lid and I/my household member is ill with diarrhea. I still have the jar. What should I do?

Do not eat any more of the peanut butter. If the diarrheal illness is severe with bloody diarrhea, fever, or symptoms lasting more than three days, you should consult a healthcare provider, and call your local health department as well, as they may wish to collect the peanut butter for testing. Otherwise, if the illness is not severe, just throw away the jar.

I/my household member ate Peter Pan/Great Value peanut butter with the product code beginning with “2111” stamped on the lid and I/my household member is ill with diarrhea. I no longer have the container of peanut butter. What should I do?

If the diarrheal illness is severe with bloody diarrhea, fever, or symptoms lasting more than three days, you should consult a healthcare provider.

I/my household member ate peanut butter that is not the Peter Pan/Great Value brand, and I/my household member is ill with diarrhea. I still have the jar. What should I do?

There's no evidence that this illness has been caused by the peanut butter you are describing. If the illness is severe with bloody diarrhea, fever, or symptoms lasting more than three days, you should consult a healthcare provider.

I have a jar of peanut butter that is not Peter Pan/Great Value and I/my children ate some of it, but no one is sick. What should I do?

There is no need to do anything differently. You may consume the peanut butter with confidence.